This event aimed to creatively depict and promote awareness through these posters on social media. Due to prevailing circumstances, the event was conducted online, with volunteers tasked to create digital posters showcasing their artistic talents while emphasizing the significance of human rights.

The competition was announced well in advance, encouraging NSS volunteers to participate and contribute their perspectives on human rights through digital art. Detailed guidelines were provided, outlining the criteria for judging, submission format, and thematic considerations.

The response from NSS volunteers was overwhelming, with a diverse range of participants expressing their creativity and passion for human rights. Volunteers eagerly embraced the challenge of translating complex human rights issues into visually impactful digital posters. Criteria such as artistic expression, thematic relevance, and clarity of message were used to assess the posters.

The winning posters and a selection of notable entries were showcased on the NSS CRCE Instagram account. This online exhibition served as a powerful platform to amplify the message of human rights, reaching a wider audience and sparking meaningful conversations. The Instagram campaign garnered significant engagement, with likes, shares, and comments reflecting a positive response from the college community and beyond. The posters successfully conveyed the essence of human rights issues, fostering a greater understanding among viewers.
